THE ELLIPSE of HIGH STYLE

*“The sun defines Miami. The Sunny Isles name is not accidental.
The Earth’s elliptical path is depicted in the towers’ shapes. The monumental ever-changing curvature creates a form identifiable from afar against the open skies.
It defines the project’s skyline and the city with a form that has meaning.”*

For over three decades, Mr. and Mrs. Defortuna—the tour-de-force couple behind South Florida residential real estate—have been working on the internationalization of Miami and cementing the city’s reputation as a global destination for business, culture, and luxury lifestyle.

Q: Fortune International Group has been at the vanguard of South Florida high-end residential development for over four decades. Over the past ten years, Miami has become a global destination with the third most prolific skyline in the U.S. after New York and Chicago. Paint a picture of Miami today and how you see the city’s evolution over the years to come.

ED: We have seen Miami mature and develop as a major capital of the world. The city’s unique geography, weather, and natural beauty are now compounded by the remarkable activity in culture, sports, entertainment, and gastronomy. Everything that you can ask for is in Miami today. In my view, we are only seeing the very beginning of it. It used to be the city of the future, and now it’s something that will become even more important in the years to come.

CONVERSATIONS WITH CREATORS

WITH
BERNARDO FORT-BRESCIA, FAIA

FOUNDING PRINCIPAL

---

A native of Lima, Bernardo Fort-Brescia did his early studies in Peru and Europe. He studied architecture and urban planning at Princeton University and received a Master of Architecture from Harvard University, where he later taught. In 1977, he founded Arquitectonica with a group of young architects. Today, the firm is known as a pioneer of globalization in the architecture profession.

Q: Arquitectonica's Bold Modernism has become synonymous with the Miami skyline. How did Miami inspire your architectural vision from the inception of your firm till now?

BFB: Geography, culture, and the moment in history are the most powerful sources of inspiration for an architect. Water and land are uniquely intertwined in Miami, resulting in organic and manmade forms. They inspire us to think of forms that are sinuous or nautical. The tropical weather and soft breezes of the trade winds inspire us to create interior spaces that engage the exterior, promoting outdoor living. The young, multicultural worldly city inspires us to open our minds to new ideas and think of the future.

Q: The duo of The St. Regis Residences, Sunny Isles Beach, Miami, towers is the ultimate skyline-defining moment from nearly every vantage point. What was your vision behind the iconic elliptical shape of the buildings in the context of the pristine locale of Sunny Isles?

BFB: The sun defines Miami. The Sunny Isles name is not accidental. The Earth's elliptical path is depicted in the tower shapes. The monumental, ever-changing curvature creates a form identifiable from afar against the open skies. It defines the project's skyline and the city with a form that has meaning.

Q: Your work extends across the globe with a great many projects in every aspect of humanistic modern design. Over the past decade, Miami has become a significant global hub for art, design, and living and the stage for some of the world's most sought-after sporting and cultural events and activities. How do you see Miami in the years to come?

BFB: Miami is still a young city. Its birth coincided with the birth of the modern movement, where there were no boundaries to creativity. The city is now seen by the world as a place where anything can happen, where everything is happening, including art, sports, and, of course, architecture. It is the newest metropolis in the making where the bold meet.

Q: Every successful project is about the dialogue and the clarity of the vision. Please describe the creative process between the partners on the project through the lens of previous rewarding collaborations with the team.

BFB: Great projects are those that evolve from an idea to a sketch to a model to a building to life within. To get there, there are architects that test ideas with market gurus, interact with financiers, transform form and space into feasible propositions with engineers, and materialize the idea into buildings with a contractor. The project is the product of a convergence of minds with a purpose. It is called passion.
